FOREWORD

The present Census was begun in 1938 under the sponsorship of the Oberlaender Trust. That it has required a little less than fifteen years for its completion is due to several factors. Except for a few periods of perhaps two months at a time it was never a full-time project, and more serious still, the hegira of our library treasures to the American equivalent of the salt mines was an effectual bar to progress during the war years. Almost coincident with the return of the manuscripts to their accustomed places was the writer's departure for Germany for several years' service with Military Government. This sojourn, which in normal times would have been of considerable assistance to the Census, was, because of the chaotic condition of German libraries immediately after the war, unable to contribute to its progress. Many of the inconsistencies inevitable to such piecemeal composition have been rectified as the copy went to the printer, but some will unhappily subsist. The problem of migration of manuscripts, too, was serious, but it has been possible not only to record the movement of some autographs from one individual to another, or to a library, after the item was originally examined, but also to include many of the manuscripts which have come to these shores in the last few years.

Some comment on the principles governing inclusion of manuscripts in the Census and on the descriptive details furnished may not be amiss. Although the original suggestion of the trustees of the Oberlaender Trust was to catalogue autograph manuscripts of German masters only, from Bach to Brahms, they acquiesced readily in the view that a comprehensive survey, without chronological or qualitative limitations, would be of greater service to musical scholars. At the outset, then, the only criterion for inclusion was whether the manuscript was in the autograph of a European composer. However, as the number of entries increased to formidable proportions it became necessary to exclude several hundred items of lesser importance, mostly by composers not known to biographical dictionaries. With 571 composers still represented after these excisions, it was manifestly impossible to be assured that all the 2017 manuscripts listed were authentic autographs. In many cases of lesser-known composers no autographs were accessible for comparison. Even where the manuscripts could be confronted with undoubted originals or facsimiles there were many where it was impossible to guarantee authenticity. In general, for the larger music libraries, it was deemed advisable to accept their classification as autographs unless it was obviously in error. In a few cases where manuscripts have recently been shown to be not in the composer's autograph, the entries were retained with a statement to that effect (see nos. 54, 894, 1354).

If the determination of autographs was not always simple, neither was the simple-looking matter of the European composer. This is complicated by the western migration of a fair number of the species during the last forty years. Should the autograph compositions of contemporary European who settled permanently in the United States, at whatever period, be included? If so, should their works composed after their arrival in this country be included, although no works by native-born Americans were accepted? Should political events be allowed to exclude from the Census the autographs of significant modern works such as the Bartók quartets, Pierrot lunaire, and the Symphony of Psalms, while the scores of Wozzeck, of the Turangalila symphony, or of Malipiero's chamber music remained? Advice was widely sought and received, but it was largely contradictory. At last a formula was evolved which has been followed with but few exceptions. The autographs of European composers who settled permanently in the United States have been included, but only of those works composed before their final settlement in this country. The two major exceptions are Bartók and Rachmaninoff. In the former case the fact that about 95 per cent of all Bartók's manuscripts are in this country made it seem important to list them all together, rather than to exclude the relatively few works composed in the last years of his life. As for Rachmaninoff, although he did indeed become an American citizen the month before his death, he also maintained a residence abroad and could just as well be considered a European almost to the end of his life. Needless to say, the works of European composers written while visiting this country or composed as commissions from American groups or individuals have been included without any hesitation.

For each entry is given the title, scrupulously copied from the manuscript, omitting besides the dedication, which is indicated in the descriptive notes, only unimportant or repetitive details. A very few dedications are left in their original position in the title. A conventional title in brackets is used either to supplement the information given in the manuscript title, or to permit grouping together items which would otherwise be separated alphabetically from each other.

The collation gives the number of pages or leaves (or volumes, in the case of large works that are unpagged) and the dimensions in centimeters, height preceding width. The descriptive notes following the collation aim to identify as completely as possible both the composition and the manuscript, if the former is not adequately identified in the title. Fragments and sketches by the more important composers have been included and identified where possible, but with less complete descriptive notes. In the case of complete works, the notes state the medium of performance, the person to whom the work is dedicated (if indicated in the manuscript), the author and first line of the text for songs, the author of the libretto for operas, oratorios, or cantatas, and any indication of place and date of composition. Except for operas, where the place and date of the first performance are cited, the publisher and date of the first edition is given, although practical considerations prevented furnishing this information in many cases, especially for minor composers. Where "complete" critical editions exist, reference is also given to the proper volume and page. Works are still further identified by the serial number in catalogues of the works of composers such as Bach, Donizetti, Liszt, Milhaud, Mozart, Schubert, and Weber. Such critical editions and catalogues are listed in the bibliography at the end of the volume. Published facsimiles are also indicated, whether complete or partial, and references to articles or books are generally given when they bear upon the manuscript in question.

Where the information was readily ascertainable, the previous owners of the autographs have been noted. For too many, however, the provenience could not be traced within the time at the compiler's disposal. A list of former owners at the end of the volume permits the reader to note those items that have come to this country from well-known collections abroad such as those of Mrs. Burrell, William H. Cummings, Wilhelm Heyer, Edward Speyer, and Jerome Stonborough. The curious may also discover that the musicologists are more numerous than composers among the ex-owners (of other composers' scores!); to match the names of Friedländer, Alois Fuchs, Otto Jahn, Kiesewetter, Sonneck, Spitta, Stumpff, and Thayer one finds only Brahms, Cherubini, Mendelssohn, and Schumann. However, the honor of the species musicus is upheld by the galaxy of distinguished performers and conductors, from Farinelli to Kreisler.

The final note for each entry is the name of the present owner. These are also alphabetically listed at the end of the volume, with the serial numbers of the manuscripts owned by each, permitting a quick reference to the entries in the body of the Census. In a few cases where the manuscript changed hands after the entry had been prepared, and the new owner preferred not to be listed, the entry has been retained with the notation "private collector." No apology is made for including some fifty manuscripts in the hands of dealers. These may of course sooner or later leave the United States for a permanent home elsewhere, but so may any of the autographs owned by some seventy-two individuals. The information given in the Census may continue to be of service even when the autographs are no longer in this country, particularly if they are inaccessible in their new home.

The bibliography at the very end of the Census does not attempt to serve as a reading list for those interested in the subject of musical autographs nor as a record of the hundreds of volumes that have been consulted in the course of this undertaking, but merely as a convenient reference to those works referred to in the text: complete editions, thematic and other catalogues of composers and collections, and studies bearing on specific manuscripts.

In the course of his investigations the census-taker has had the opportunity of inspecting, albeit sometimes too briefly, all but about 150 of the autographs enumerated in the Census. But of more than two thousand manuscripts listed, fewer than one hundred were adequately described or identified in published catalogues or card catalogues. Indeed, some of the most interesting and valuable manuscripts were located in libraries which had replied to the first questionnaire that they possessed no autograph musical manuscripts. No one knows better than the compiler of this Census, however, that there are omissions, both numerous and serious. Nor would it surprise him very much if some of those who let repeated letters go unanswered were among the first to protest the omission of their treasures. Some, it is hoped, may even recant their firm assertion that the value of their manuscripts would depreciate if their location were known, and release news of their autograph holdings. And if one ponders the various unrelated happy accidents that resulted in the inclusion of certain items in the Census, some of which were described by the writer in the Musical Quarterly, it must be obvious that there were many more accidents that never befell him at all. Since it is quite likely that there will be addenda and corrigenda bobbing up from various quarters, it is hoped that they will be forwarded direct to the writer so that supplements may be issued as required.

Finally it is a particular pleasure, the greater for being so long delayed, to acknowledge the assistance extended over many years to the author by librarians, musicologists, dealers and collectors, in facilitating access to manuscripts and in giving generously of the fruits of their knowledge and experience. Special appreciation is due Dr. Harold Spivacke, Mr. Edward N. Waters, and Mr. Richard S. Hill of the Music Division of the Library of Congress, and Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, Mr. Philip L. Miller, and Mr. Sidney Beck of the Music Division of the New York Public Library, indeed to the whole staff of both these Music Divisions, for it was in these two splendid music libraries that not only more than half of the autographs listed in the Census were found, but that a great deal of the work on the descriptive notes on other manuscripts was done as well. Dr. Richard G. Appel of the Boston Public Library and Dr. Nathan van Patten of the Memorial Library of Music at Stanford University greatly eased the labor incident to the cataloguing of the large collections under their care. At various times the special knowledge of the late Dr. Alfred Einstein, and of Dr. Otto Erich Deutsch, Dr. Antony von Hoboken, and Dr. Curt Sachs was freely given in the solution of special problems. The Oberlaender Trust deserves special gratitude not only for originating the project, but also for assuming the financial burden of its progress and eventual publication, through dark days where patience was sorely strained. Last of all, the author wishes to thank the staff of the University of Pennsylvania Press, and particularly Mr. Robert Dear, for his understanding coöperation in seeing the work through the press.

INTRODUCTION

Carleton Sprague Smith

When one thinks of manuscripts, the average person envisages a document which has never been published or perhaps a carefully copied text bound in vellum with illuminated miniatures. The case of music is somewhat different. True, there are many unpublished works, but printing being expensive, there were thousands and thousands of copies made for performance purposes—for use rather than esthetic pleasure. Composers themselves preferred a nice calligraphic copy or a printed edition to their own script, much as businessmen today favor a stenographic presentation of their thoughts to their own handwritten drafts.

Some presentation copies of music manuscripts were made in the later Middle Ages and the Renaissance and there are a few with illuminated decorations. The Liber Amicorum, for instance, were often beautifully written, and Mendelssohn decorated a few of his manuscripts with romantic water colors at the top of the page in order to give the "Stimmung" of the piece. This is, however, rare, and the printed music page from the time of Petrucci in 1501 was usually clearer and easier to read and play from than any but the finest manuscripts. The composer's holograph was not accorded any particular importance either by musicians or the authors themselves until the nineteenth century, and as late as 1848, Schubert's scores could be used in Vienna for lighting an oven!

* * *

As a result of this attitude, manuscripts were scattered to the four winds and, even when they were valued, were like as not given as mementos to admirers of the deceased. Even in our own day, the widow of a well-known composer cut pieces out of her husband's compositions and gave them to his friends. Fortunately libraries, conservatories, state archives, and collectors have made successful efforts to pick up holographs by distinguished creators, but all too often the family held on to the pieces for a generation or two and then the papers slipped away, were thrown out or disappeared.

The performer and the composer are apt to have a different approach to music. The former generally plays what is on the music stand before him, giving the matter little further thought. The composer, on the other hand, is interested in the inner content and is attentive to every phase and the structure of the work. In the old days, composers often copied dozens of compositions which interested them and we have manuscripts of Vivaldi's works in Bach's handwriting and compositions of Bach copied by Mozart. Today composers consult printed and black line print scores without being forced to copy them out. Some time is gained by this; familiarity with the work is not generally so thorough.

With the recent development of musicology in our universities and conservatories and the rounded training of our composers, the analysis of the creative process is receiving more and more importance and, studying the great composers, we naturally turn to their holographs. Reading a music manuscript is not as easy as perusing a letter because the symbols must be heard in the former and not one sound only but many at the same time. More people can extract the full meaning from a manuscript poem or novel than from a string quartet or a symphony. To transfer the habit of reading printed scores to manuscript sources requires special training, but it is most rewarding and worth the effort.

* * *

A knowledge of paleography is needed to read any body of manuscripts, since the handwriting of individuals varies tremendously. Each country and each century has certain characteristics and the abbreviations, letters, and symbols change over the years. We are still rather ill informed about handwriting and are learning more every day.

In recent years, graphological analyses have come to play a part in our study of manuscripts and frequently unusual insight is obtained thereby. Graphology can often explain the intellectual and moral personality of an individual, for handwriting is an index to the manner in which a person thinks. There are many elements to analyze which the average reader casually looking at a score might ignore. A music student examines the writing for size, form, direction, spacing, and neatness. Then there are factors such as intensity, heavy or light shading, fast or slow strokes. Sometimes there are many abbreviations. Continuity is another element and the writing can be unequal in height and width and some of the letters may be of different sizes. Certain composers write up and down, others incline to the right or left; some are stiff, their opposites supple. We find separated and run together scores—some clear as crystal, others confused. There is nothing quite like a manuscript to divulge the workings of a creator's mind.

One of the remarkable differences between a normal literary manuscript and a music manuscript is the indication of tempo in the latter. Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe does not indicate whether it is to be read at top speed or a leisurely pace, but some of Vachel Lindsay's poems have stage directions. A musical score, of course, is completely dependent on speed, and the old Italian words adagio, andante, allegro and presto are still accepted by most musicians, although French, German, and English equivalents are used.

Music notation is a less exact science than our written language made up of various alphabets and constantly evolving. From neumes, the European musician went to four and then to five-line notation and tablature. Modern electric instruments and quarter-tone compositions require still other symbols. Composers have struggled with notation from the beginning and probably always will. Sometimes they have made mistakes which time has corrected. Part of the creative process is making the symbols do what one wants, and Martin Luther, speaking of Josquin des Prés, said: "He is the master of the notes; the others are mastered by them."

* * *

The struggle with the notes is best illustrated in Beethoven, who worked his compositions over and over again and sometimes made as many as five different endings. His sketch books are full of fragments showing how he changed and remodeled. For the student, it is often more important to see what a composer crossed out than what has remained.

In contrast to Beethoven, Mozart devised pieces completely in his head and then simply wrote them down. His powers of concentration were so great that he could write out one of his compositions with all sorts of noise going on around him and, in a letter to his sister, he tells of composing a prelude in his head while copying out a fugue (April 20, 1782). When Georges Enesco wrote a long violin sonata in two days, he explained to some astonished friends: "Yes, I wrote it down in two days, but I'd been thinking about it for two years."

There are many different ways of composing. Some musicians regard every note which they have written as sacred, others do not care if players change their ideas slightly. Bach's handwriting has a baroque solidity to it and his ornamentation is written out in great detail. He was one of the first composers to take the trouble to indicate exactly what he wanted, while others, notably Handel, left the ornamentation to the imagination of the performer. In Bach's manuscripts, the angle of the notes often indicates tempo and design of the phrase and the concentration and force of his personality is mirrored in his holographs. Even in the Clavier-Uebung and the first part of the Kunst der Fuge, which were engraved on copper by the Leipzig Cantor, we feel this force and expressiveness. Haydn, like Bach an extremely religious man, often put Laus Deo at the top of his scores. His writing is clear and a little bourgeois, but he was very sure of himself, and the father of the modern symphony and the string quartet wrote with consummate taste. Schubert's manuscripts have a Biedermeier quality, Chopin possessed an almost feminine tenderness, while Brahms was energetic and manly. The calculating genius Richard Wagner had a very neat hand and he even made lithographs of The Flying Dutchman and Tannhäuser.

* * *

This brings us to the whole question of facsimiles and microfilm. It is of course impractical to let everyone handle rare scores and for that reason, photostats, facsimiles and microfilm copies are highly to be recommended. Certain libraries make a point of giving the readers reproductions rather than originals and this is an excellent idea if the institution can afford it. Several hundred classical works have been reprinted in facsimile form although the editions have nearly all been small. The benefit of these copies should be made available to thousands, not hundreds of musicians throughout the world. That they are not is due partly to ignorance of their value. What amateur or serious student, however, would not be delighted to have a facsimile of The Messiah, the Ninth Symphony or a Schubert song?

Playing a piece with which one is familiar from a reproduction of the composer's holograph, always supposing that it is legible (some of course are not), gives a performer an entirely different sense. If we follow a recording with the facsimile before us, a similar sensation is experienced. Becoming acquainted with the manuscript is a rewarding and instructive pleasure and a personal element is added which contributes both an esthetic and a psychological understanding.

A manuscript gives one a view into the workshop of the composer, showing how he creates and thinks. There are naturally several types of manuscripts. The initial sketch, the reduced score, the full score, the first finished version, the final version which goes to the engraver and so forth. For many students, the earlier versions have a greater interest than the final copies which can be quite impersonal. There is a danger of course in reading too much into a manuscript and deducing things which are not so. A few years ago, a musician who was examining a symphony by a well-known composer, concluded that the first movement, which was copied in a restrained style, showed the author in a relaxed mood, while the other movements, written with nervous haste, found him warming to his task. The idea was logical, the only trouble being that the first movement was written out by a copyist. Let not the uninitiated scoff too much. Frequently the amanuenses imitated the handwriting of the composers they were working for and we have the well-known case of Bach's second wife who could write very much as her husband, and Mozart's pupil, Süssmayer, who reproduced the Salzburg master's hand amazingly.

In modern times, many musicians have followed Wagner's lead and there are thousands of photolithographed pieces available, particularly orchestral scores and operas, in the handwriting of the authors. Their legibility sometimes puts them into the class of professional calligraphic writing, or even works of art, in which case they may or may not reveal as much about the composer as an earlier draft. Undoubtedly the legible photo-offset reproduction or black line print is psychologically preferable to most printed scores.

* * *

Perhaps a word should be said about music collecting in the United States. One of the first collectors was Joseph Drexel, who came from Austria as a young boy. His fine library formed the basis of the present music division of the New York Public Library in the 1880's. Despite this beginning, there has never been the same interest in music manuscripts in the United States as in their literary counterparts. The Library of Congress is a notable exception; the late Oscar G. Sonneck, first chief of its Music Division, acquired for it significant manuscripts from the Heyer and Cummings collections, and those holdings have been swelled in recent years by the treasures of the Coolidge, Whittall, and Koussevitzky Foundations, giving our national library a distinguished place among the great music libraries of the world. The public libraries of New York and Boston and the Newberry Library in Chicago have in their smaller collections a number of important items. Some of our well-known universities, Harvard, Yale, Rochester, and Stanford, have likewise formed collections of interest. Curiously enough, outstanding private collections are few in number, and the most important have been given to public or institutional libraries.

Scholars searching for manuscripts in America have not found it easy in the past, as many who consult this Census can testify. Who for instance would expect to find the first draft of Wagner's Das Rheingold in Titusville, Pennsylvania, the Schubert Impromptus, op. 90, in Newark, Delaware, Beethoven's Rage over the Lost Penny in Providence, or the violin concerto of Alban Berg in Syracuse? Three of Massenet's operas (including Thaïs and Werther) are in a private collection in Yonkers, and so it goes. Dr. Albrecht has had a most interesting time tracking down material and he could surely write a book of his adventures. Manuscripts tend to become more valuable with the years and it is ironic perhaps to think that a few of the scores of Schubert and Mozart would bring more today than the composers ever earned in their lifetime.

A manuscript means nothing to many—and, in a way, it comes to life only when the music sounds within the inner ear. It is of course only a vehicle, for the music itself must be recreated by performers. Once written, however, the ideas are condensed and crystallized in a way that enables posterity to look behind the scenes, and studying a manuscript in the quiet of a library is, to the initiated, one of the world's supreme pleasures. An important holograph can be the materialized pattern of the composer's thought, a guide to the understanding of the science and practice of music. A manuscript is not an absolute source but an invaluable one.

As Robert Schumann so well observed: "Die Musiken mancher Komponisten gleichen ihren Handschriften: schwierig zu lesen, seltsam anzuschauen; hat man's heraus aber, so ist's als könne es gar nicht anders sein; manche Handschrift gehört zum Gedanken, der Gedanke zum Charakter."

* * *

In 1937 a number of librarians and music scholars, realizing that there was no good list of European music manuscripts in the United States, outlined a project to remedy this situation. The Oberlaender Trust, which was set up to further German and Austro-American relations, became interested in the scheme, since fully three-quarters of the manuscripts came from composers born in those countries. Professor Otto E. Albrecht of the University of Pennsylvania was selected to undertake the task, owing to his unusual knowledge of music, languages, and manuscripts and his meticulous care as a bibliographer.

It is not an easy task to cover so large a territory. For one thing, many of our large libraries are not always sure of their holdings. Sometimes a piece is catalogued under the name of the composer but not under the heading Manuscripts. In this way, unless one looks under the name of the musician, the manuscript may be ignored. This study actually is concerned with holographs rather than manuscripts and some libraries do not distinguish between them. A holograph is a manuscript written entirely in the author's hand. A manuscript, of course, can be by anyone. There are thousands of handwritten copies in our libraries which are not the work of the composers. In order to judge the authenticity of a manuscript, a knowledge of paleography is necessary and here, too, a great deal of skill is required, since a good many forgeries have come upon the scene during the past fifty years.

The migratory propensities of people in America sometimes make it difficult to give the exact location of a manuscript, as the owner may move from New York to San Francisco or even Florence with his collection. Certain buyers are given to trading and their collections do not stay the same from year to year. Still other owners refuse to give any information whatsoever about their holdings and unless the manuscript is well known or described in a sale catalogue one can only conjecture what the particular individual possesses.

Dr. Albrecht has traveled the length and breadth of the land and seen most of the manuscripts he describes. This is no mean feat and, having looked at nearly two thousand holographs, he really knows whereof he writes. Inevitably there will be errors, and a census is soon out of date as new material is discovered in archives and additions made to important collections. Notwithstanding these facts, this catalogue will be of tremendous benefit to all. Serious musicians and music lovers must be grateful to Dr. Albrecht and to the Oberlaender Trust for making the publication possible.
